1. The first step in the process of creating a new product is to identify a market need. This involves conducting market research to understand what consumers want and what problems they are facing. Once a need is identified, the next step is to develop a concept that addresses this need. This is often done through brainstorming sessions and the creation of a prototype. The third step is to conduct a feasibility study to determine if the concept is viable. This involves assessing the technical, financial, and market aspects of the idea. If the study is positive, the next step is to develop a business plan. This plan outlines the company's goals, strategies, and financial projections. Finally, the product is launched into the market, and the company monitors its performance and makes adjustments as needed.

Background:

Fresno City College currently has a lease for two production copiers in the Copy Center that is set to expire in August 2006. In anticipation of this event, the print, media and communications staff and Business Office staff at Fresno City College have been working with the Purchasing Department to evaluate digital copiers of current technology to replace those coming off lease. Competing vendors were invited to copier systems. Important features identified in the evaluation apability, and the ability to network copiers for on-line production.

After evaluation of the equipment and proposals, the Canon ImageRunner 7105 copiers were selected on the basis of performance, features, and price.
